A one-sequence course, self-help for instructors, this Tutor's Script and Workbook is the first of its kind in the ESL field. It permits lay volunteers, as well as certificated teachers, to tutor this self-contained program, based on mastery of the dictionary diacritical codes. Eight sessions (16 hours, overall).

Designed for use at intermediate levels of literacy/ESL skills, this multi-functional course can generate dramatic improvements in all these areas:

- clarity of spoken communications
- general conversational fluency of words, phrases, and rhythms
- aural comprehension
- conversion of reading vocabulary to speaking vocabulary
- vocabulary development to needs
- self-sufficiency and self-confidence

Fully tested in the classroom, this course permits the mix of any combination of native languages and a wide range of conversational skills of up to ten students per class.

All students must be literate in their own language and should read English at fifth/sixth grade levels or higher.

Provision is made in the text for the addition of job-specific vocabulary, if desired.

Course needs for one group of ten students:

- one copy of "Practical Word Power"
- Six or more copies of Dell's American Heritage Dictionary
- newspaper sections or clippings

Practical Word Power permits immediate direct action at the point of need by:

- school systems, covering
  - instruction of ESL students directly
  - orientation of volunteer tutors
- employers of persons with limited English-conversation skills
- labor unions whose members include language — handicapped persons
- federal offices of Refugee Resettlement
- state employment and social services agencies
- public libraries
- volunteer literacy networks
- religious organizations
- ethnic alternative schools
- concerned individuals
